The lineage of Mary Magdalene and Jesus has long been disputed, and now comes a novel based on research that holds the reader's attention with unexpected plot twists. The two couples that translated unknown scrolls in Secrets of the Magdalene Scrolls, are now shocked from their complacent lives when Ellen has a surprising encounter with a mysterious old-world type of man who disappears as fast as he appeared, leaving Ellen with a portmanteau filled with ancient documents that when translated will shock the world.

Weaving into the present day story the lives of two women of Mary Magdalene's lineage, Johnson has written a dynamic atmospheric story of passion and intrigue with the commitment of four people who choose to translate these new documents while thrust once more into situations that place them in jeopardy along with their children. Even as the land in this area seemingly was preparing to sleep for the winter, she knew it was vibrantly alive. It was at this moment she felt a presence, but in glancing around, she could not see anyone. A soft breeze ruffled her hair and a surge of love engulfed her. Smiling, she got up and bowed to an unseen presence she felt in the gentle wind.

Continuing her walk, Ellen smiled as she thought of her marriage to Peter and the subsequent birth of the twins. My gawd, she thought. It's been almost six years since Peter and I married after the discovery of the Magdalene Scrolls. Now Magda and Joseph are four years old and will have their fifth birthday within six weeks. They are so wise for their age.

Still deep in her thoughts, Ellen began walking back to the chateau where she and Peter lived part-time throughout the year. It was a wedding gift to them in joint ownership with Jill and Sebastian, from her half-brother, Alain. With her attention focused on returning to the chateau, she was startled when a man appeared on the path in front of her. He appeared from out of nowhere and stood watching her.

The man was of medium height with white silvery hair reaching down to his shoulders. He wore a dark forest-green cape reaching to his knees and under which she could see black baggy trousers. What struck her most was his commanding presence and his brilliant blue eyes—a contrast to his dark skin. Later she would remember his eyes reminded her of her mother's eyes.

Looking down at his feet, Ellen noticed an old-looking wooden portmanteau trimmed in leather sitting on the ground. When she looked up to ask what this meant, the man was gone. Shaken, she looked around while calling out, "Come back! Who are you? Come back!" Only the sounds of the birds breaking the silence of the forest were heard.
