These are sketches from the Left Bank of the contemporary imagination, postcards from France's literary counter-culture, poems snatched from the maelstrom of the contemporary. They are urban, urgent and vital, engaging with daily life and with the struggle to humanise it, representing the work of a group of poets gathered around the radical poetry publisher Le Temps des Cerises.

"We suffer from thickened Larkinism according to which everything foreign is suspect. The influences on my own thought and writing are mainly foreign and mostly European - especially Flaubert, Cervantes and Tolstoy - so I was eager to bring to British readers a taste of what's going on in French poetry, but not the poetry that Dominique de Villepin reads."
